

Bertelsmann Stiftung (ed.)
Cristóbal Rovira Kaltwasser, Robert Vehrkamp, Christopher Wratil
Policy Brief 1/2019: Europe's Choice
Populist attitudes and voting intentions in the 2019 European election

2019, 8 pp (PDF)

Free of charge

 add to basket

 Download

Representation gaps cause populism: those who feel that they are poorly represented are more populist in their thinking and at the polls. The same also applies to the 2019 European elections. However, the populist citizens only agree on two things: they are sceptical towards Europe and dissatisfied with EU democracy. When it comes to substantive political issues, left-wing and right-wing populist voters are even more divided than the voters of the mainstream parties. This makes it more difficult to form new majorities in the next European Parliament.

Project

- Monitoring Democracy

CONTACT

Dr. Robert Vehrkamp